

How I Found the Farm – 6

Hi Debbie --

I found the Farm next to the copier in the workroom at Westminster Presbyterian Church in Minneapolis, MN.

Westminster is a big downtown church, very vital, very busy, huge amount of global and local outreach in addition to all the usual church-type stuff. We even have our own counseling center (for the community as well as church members), administratively independent from the church, run by licensed counselors who also are ordained ministers.

The workroom copier is connected to all the computers used by staff and volunteers, so it gets a LOT of action. Naturally, a wide variety of printed items will collect in the tray, and sometimes needs to be sorted through and set aside for later pickup -- which is how I found the Farm.

I simply was picking up copies of work I'd done when I noticed an email on the table adjacent to the copier, lying there in the open for all the world to see. It was addressed to the director of the counseling center, and was an eMo from Barbara. Geranium Farm? What's that? I read the email, and was immediately hooked, and the rest is history.

My priest, Fr. Ed Zelley, told me about the e-mo's.

Not a very interesting story - my spiritual director recommended it, and she was right to think I would enjoy it.
